Five One-Act Plays
by Don Byrne

SUMMARY

‘Listen to the boy!’
Johnny Bell wants to tell Mr Smith, the shopkeeper, that two men have stolen some apples from his car. But Mr Smith and the other customers in the shop think that Johnny is just being rude and trying to jump the queue. When he finally gets to tell Mr Smith about the theft, it is too late, of course.

‘The right person’
Who is the right person to rent a room in Mrs Stone’s house? She wants the young man who sees it first, although he thinks the furniture is too old, the bed too hard and the price too high... oh, and he’s not interested in the view. She doesn’t want the old man who sees it next, although he thinks the furniture is nice, the bed is fine and the view is lovely. But she changes her mind about the old man when he discovers that one of her old paintings from the garage is worth a lot of money. She decides she would like him to have the room, even if she won’t be there for a while and doesn’t know when she will return. She wants the young man who sees it first, although he thinks the furniture is too old, the bed too hard and the price too high.

‘An afternoon on the beach’
Granny wants to sit in the shade during her afternoon on the beach, but her daughter is determined that she should sit in the sun. Granny appears to capitulate, but as soon as the rest of the family have gone exploring the smugglers’ caves, she moves back behind a sheltering rock and goes to sleep. Some time later the family realise that the tide is coming in and Granny may be in danger. Sure enough, when they return to the spot where they left her, she has disappeared, although her book and umbrella are floating in the sea. It is a moment before Granny is discovered behind the rock and all is well.

‘A Bad Dream’
Bank manager George Hill orders his wife to dismiss their maid-of-all-work Annie, after twenty years of loyal service, because, according to him, she is a bad cook and makes terrible coffee. His wife points out that it will be difficult for Annie to find another job but George is implacable. He falls into a sleep of self-righteousness whilst his wife goes off to ‘do something’.

George is visited by two employees of his bank who inform him that he must resign, because of his lateness, laziness and generally impolite behaviour to the staff at the bank. He points out that he will find it hard to find another job at his age but they are implacable. He accepts his fate. However, there is more to come. His wife returns to tell him that she is going away for a while and doesn’t know when she will return. She leaves. Annie comes in and he asks if she wants to leave too. ‘No,’ she says, even when he says he might not be able to pay her in the future, she wants to stay because it is her home.

Suddenly, everything becomes clear. George has been dreaming – the men from the bank, his wife leaving, even his conversation with Annie. Luckily George’s wife has not got around to dismissing Annie because George has had a change of mind. In fact, he wants to hire someone to help Annie now. Could his dream have had anything to do with his new attitude?

‘The Professor’
The absent-minded old Professor has designed a new invention and offered it to the government for free. Unfortunately, the day that the government men are due to come, the Professor’s daughter and ‘minder’ has to leave the house to deal with an emergency. Two men arrive, present their identity cards and take away some of the Professor’s papers then, horror of horrors, it is discovered that the men were imposters who had ambushed the real government men and stolen their identity cards. The design of the invention has been taken. Or has it? It seems that the Professor, whilst absent-minded, is by no means senile. He saw through the two men and gave them some old papers of no value.

BACKGROUND AND THEMES

All of the plays in the volume are, or could be seen to be, about lack of respect.

Two of the plays deal with the theme of lack of respect which is brought about by ageism. In Listen to the boy the ageism is directed at a young boy who is not accorded the courtesy of a fair hearing and as a result a thief gets away. The boy cannot give his important news to the adults until it is too late. In An afternoon on the beach the ageism leads to the wishes of an aged parent being ignored. But Granny gets her own back – she simply waits until her family have gone and then does what she wanted to do in the first place.

A third play also deals with lack of respect; in this case the respect which is due to a loyal employee. In A bad dream, the bank manager is completely unmoved by the years of loyal service that his cook has given his family when he decides, almost on a whim it seems, to dismiss her. The moral of this story is clearly do as you would be done by as the bank manager is lazy and workshy and yet is amazed when, in a dream, he is dismissed or, at least, asked to resign. Even if Annie is a bad cook, perhaps she should be treated by George, a bad bank manager, with an element of fellow feeling.

Perhaps The Professor is also about lack of respect. We, the audience, are led to assume that the absent-minded old man has been easily hoodwinked into handing over the designs of his important new invention. But we should not confuse absent-mindedness with stupidity. The Professor has easily seen through the tricksters but, rather than confront... them and risk a violent attempt to take the papers, fobs them off with some worthless papers.

There is another common theme running through all of the plays. Something is not what it seems. Johnny is not being rude, the old man looking for a room is more than just an old man, Granny is not dead, the bank manager has not really been asked to resign and the professor has not really given away his invention. Only in one play, however, does the playwright use dramatic irony, allowing the audience into the secret. In An afternoon on the beach, we know that Granny hasn’t really drowned and therefore the grief and concern is comical rather than tragic.

The following teacher-led activities cover the same sections of text as the exercises at the back of the Reader and supplement those exercises. For supplementary exercises covering shorter sections of the book, see the photocopiable Student’s Activities pages of this Factsheet. These are primarily for use with class readers but, with the exception of the discussion and pair/groupwork activities, can also be used by students working alone in a self-access centre.

ACTIVITIES BEFORE READING THE BOOK
Put students into groups to talk about the kind of plays they like and to explain why they like that kind of play.

ACTIVITIES AFTER READING A SECTION
General Activity:
After each play, ask students to discuss in groups the moral of the story.

Specific activities:
‘Listen to the boy!’
1 Put students into pairs to make a list of the ways that Johnny tries to tell Mr Smith about the men. Example: Please, Mr Smith …
2 Put students into groups to role play a scene in which one person has something important to say, but the other people won’t let him/her say it until it’s too late.

‘The Right Person’
1 Put students into groups to make a list of things they would like to have in their ideal room.
2 Put students into pairs to role play a scene in which one person is trying to stop the other person doing something e.g. buying a particular car.

‘An Afternoon on the Beach’
1 Put students into groups to make a list of things that they should take for an afternoon on the beach.
2 Ask students to imagine that the Brown family really can’t find Granny. Put students into pairs to role play the conversation between Mr or Mrs Brown and a police officer about what happened.

‘A Bad Dream’
1 Ask students to imagine that Mrs Hill told Annie she must leave. Put students into pairs to role play the scene.
2 Put students into groups to make of list of things that show Mr Hill has changed at the end of the play.

‘The Professor’
1 Put students into pairs to work out how exactly the Professor tricks the men.
2 Put students into groups to role play the scene between the Professor and the two men.

ACTIVITIES AFTER READING THE BOOK
Put students into groups to find connections between two or more plays in this collection. For ideas on connections, see Background and Themes.

Activities while reading the book

‘Listen to the boy!’

1. What does Johnny want to tell Mr Smith?
2. How many times does Johnny try to tell Mr Smith?
3. Find the replies (i–x) to each statement (a–j).

(a) You were here before me, weren’t you?
(b) Are these all right?
(c) Children today! They’re so rude.
(d) How old are you?
(e) What’s your name?
(f) You live in Church Street, don’t you?
(g) I want some apples, please. One kilo.
(h) Are there any sweeter ones?
(i) Can I see them?
(j) Why didn’t you tell me?

(i) I’m afraid the bed’s very hard. Try it.
(ii) Look at that wall. We’ll have to repair it. It will take time.
(iii) Oh, that doesn’t matter. I don’t work. When I go to town, I can walk.
(iv) Oh, that doesn’t worry me. I was talking about the noise of cars and buses.
(v) Perhaps they’ll never build them. Who knows?
(vi) That’s not necessary. I like a hard bed.

‘The Right Person’

1. How do Mr Stone, the young man and the old man feel about the room? Tick each statement they agree with, cross each statement they don’t agree with. Do not put anything if they don’t say anything about an item.
