But back pain is different. There simply isn’t a close connection between the condition of the spine and whether or not people experience pain. Research has shown that a majority of people who have never had any significant back pain have the very same ‘abnormalities’ (such as bulging or herniated spinal discs) that are frequently blamed for chronic back conditions. And then there are the millions of people with severe chronic back pain who show no structural abnormalities in their back at all. Mind-body therapies can reduce pain and opioid use. Over-the-counter cold and flu medicines can affectâ€¦ Is it time to stop skimming over full-fat dairy? Comments. 14.
